FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION

UNITED STATES ARMY

PINE CAMP, NEW YORK

1942

JACOB L. DEVERS

Major General

Commanding Armored Forces

Major General Jacob L. Devers, chief of America's newest fighting arm, The Armored Force, was born September 8, 1887, at York, Pennsylvania. He was appointed to the United States Military Academy in 1905 and was graduated four years later.

Upon his graduation he was appointed a Second Lieutenant of Field Artillery and assigned to Battery A, Fourth Field Artillery, Vancouver Barracks, Washington.

He served for five years with the Fourth, going to Fort D. A. Russell (now Fort Francis E. Warren) when Regimental Headquarters and two battalions of the regiment were transferred to that post in 1910.

In December, 1912, he was ordered to West Point, where he served as an instructor in the Department of Mathematics. On April 1, 1916, he was promoted to First Lieutenant, Field Artillery, and assigned to the Ninth Field Artillery in Hawaii. He returned to the States in December, 1917, and was detailed to Fort Sill, Oklahoma, as an instructor in the Field Artillery School there.

From this time on his promotion was rapid. He became a Captain in May, 1917, a temporary Lieutenant Colonel, National Army, July 30, 1918, and a Colonel, October 24, 1918. During this period he served as post executive officer, Fort Sill, and commanded the Ninth and the First Field Artillery. Just before the armistice was signed he was ordered to France in command of the 60th Field Artillery. While in France he was graduated from the French Field Artillery School at Treves.

Upon returning to the United States he was assigned as senior instructor of Field Artillery at West Point and commanded the Field Artillery detachment there. At this time he reverted to his permanent grade of Captain but was promoted to Major, Regular Army, July 1, 1920. Upon completing his detail at the Military Academy, he was ordered to the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, from which he was graduated in 1925 as a distinguished graduate.

On June 29, 1925, he was assigned to Fort Sill again, this time as Director of the Department of Gunnery, in which capacity he served until September 1, 1929, when he was ordered to duty in the office of the Chief of Field Artillery, Washington, D. C., where he remained until 1932.

In 1932 he attended the United States Army War College and upon his graduation a year later was assigned to Fort Hoyle, Maryland, as executive officer of the First Field Artillery Brigade and commanding officer of the Second Battalion, Sixth Field Artillery. In February, 1934, he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel and in June was ordered to Fort Meyer, Virginia, in command of the 16th Field Artillery, where he stayed until May, 1936.

At this time he was sent back to West Point as graduate manager of athletics and executive officer of the academy.

General Devers was promoted to the grade of Colonel July 1, 1938, and in August, 1939, he was assigned to the Panama Canal Department as Chief of Staff, where he remained until he was promoted to the grade of Brigadier General in July, 1940, and placed in command of the Washington Provisional Brigade.

From August to October he served as senior Army officer on the joint Army-Navy board which located the Army and Navy bases acquired from Great Britain in Bermuda, Newfoundland and the West Indies.

On October 1, General Devers was promoted to the grade of Major General and assigned to command of the Ninth Division and the post of Fort Bragg, North Carolina. He left there to assume his present command as chief of the Armored Force on August 1, 1941.

Insignia

BLAZONRY

The colorful triangular shoulder patch worn on the left shoulder of soldiers and officers of the Fourth Armored Division has a history, one that is varied and dates back to the old tank battalions of World War days. To it have been added additional symbols.

Forming the basic pattern of the insignia are three equal segments of yellow, red and blue. The yellow, on top, represents the cavalry, the blue in the lower left-hand part of the triangle represents the infantry, and the red in the lower right the artillery.

Superimposed on the three equal sized torques is the insignia of the Seventh Cavalry Brigade (Mechanized), one of the first mechanized units of the new Army. The combination of the insignia of the old tank battalions and the cavalry brigade is symbolic of the merging of those arms as the progenitors, or parent organizations of the Armored Force.

The Seventh Cavalry Brigade's insignia is a tank track, representing mobility and armored protection, a cannon running diagonally across the tank track, representing fire power, and a red bolt of lightning, representing shock action.

The cannon and tank track, outlined in black, represent a general's command—in this case the command of Major General John S. Wood.

The "4" at the top represents the Fourth Armored Division.

The patch, in addition to being worn on the left shoulder of the blouse, or coat, is worn on the left breast of the field jacket.

HISTORY OF THE FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION

On the wind-swept, sandy plains of Pine Camp, New York, the Fourth Armored Division, Army of the United States, came into being at 6:05 p. m. April 15, 1941, when Brigadier General, now Major General, Henry W. Baird read orders of activation shortly after the initial complement of 600 officers and 3,200 enlisted men reached Pine Camp. The assembly stood rigidly at attention while the flag was raised, the orders read and the new division's first retreat ceremony held.

The division, through its various cadres, traces its history back to Fort Knox, Kentucky, where the First Armored Division contributed many of the trained personnel to the new Fourth Armored Division.

Transfer of the personnel from the First Armored Division was made principally by rail, although some of the men traveled in an overland motor convoy. Many who made the trip were selectees and this was their first taste of Army life. Preceded by a small advance party, the principal motor convoy of 151 vehicles left Fort Knox for an 815-mile trek to Northern New York carrying nine officers and 479 enlisted men.

April 15 is a big day to the Fourth Armored Division, just as July 10—Organization Day—is a big day to the Armored Force, for on April 15, 1941, the breath of life was blown into the Fourth Armored Division under orders of Major General Adna Romanzo Chaffee, Chief of the Armored Force.

The activation of the new division brought 14 units into service: Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Fourth Armored Division; Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Fourth Armored Brigade; the Fifth, Seventh and Eighth Armored Regiments; the 66th Field Artillery Regiment (Armored); the 24th Engineer Battalion (Armored); the 51st Infantry Regiment (Armored); the 20th Ordnance Battalion (Armored); the 18th Quartermaster Battalion (Armored); the 46th Medical Battalion (Armored); the 22nd Field Artillery Battalion (Armored); the Fourth Reconnaissance Battalion, and the 49th Signal Company.

In the first World War the 51st Infantry Regiment was organized as part of the Sixth Division at Chickamauga Park, Georgia, on June 16, 1917, with men transferred from the 11th Infantry. The regiment left the United States July 4, 1918, and participated in battles at the Gerardmer sector from September 3 to October 12, and in the Meuse-Argonne offensive from November 1 to November 8. Made inactive September 22, 1922, the regiment was reorganized April 15, 1941.

The 22nd Field Artillery Battalion (Armored) was originally organized as a separate battalion of mountain artillery from personnel of the Fourth Field Artillery in July, 1918, in the Panama Canal Zone. Redesignated July 1, 1921, as the First Battalion, 22nd Field Artillery, it was made inactive September 15 of the same year.

The following is a quotation from a letter from the Quartermaster General concerning the World War history of the 24th Engineers:

The 24th Engineers (Supply and Shop) was organized at Camp Dix, New Jersey, in November, 1917. Companies C, D, and E of the 24th Engineers were organized originally in September, 1917, as Companies F, D, and E, respectively of the 26th Engineers. They were transferred to the 24th Engineers in November, 1917. Company F of the 24th Engineers was organized originally in September, 1917, as Company F of the 25th Engineers. It was transferred to the 24th Engineers in November, 1917.

The 24th Engineers served in France from April 7, 1918, to May 16, 1919, and had the following combat service: St. Mihiel, September 12 to September 16, 1918; Meuse-Argonne, September 26 to October 12, 1918.

The regiment was demobilized at Camp Jackson, South Carolina, June 3, 1919.

The present 24th Engineers (General Service) was constituted as an inactive unit in 1927.

Under date of April 3, 1931, the following orders were issued: "In order to preserve the history and traditions of the 24th Engineers (Supply and Shop), a World War unit, which was organized at Camp Dix, New Jersey, in November, 1917, served in France from April 7, 1918, to May 16, 1919, and was demobilized at Camp Jackson, South Carolina, June 3, 1919, it is hereby reconstituted and consolidated with the 24th Engineers (General Service)."

Organization and administration of the new division rivaled the striking speed it was destined to develop. Upon arriving at Pine Camp, the Fourth Armored Division set up housekeeping in its headquarters "on the hill," while the separate units were assigned their respective areas.

Within two days after formation, 125 officers were assigned to the Division Officers' Training Center for a refresher course, and all were ready for immediate training work when the first contingent of 600 Selective Service men from the East arrived on May 12. Selectees continued to arrive until May 25 when the division's authorized strength was reached.

The arrival of the selectees meant but one thing, for the time being, training of the men. The Fourth was going to school, and schools of every sort cropped up.

On May 12 the names of several of the units of the division were changed. (The personnel of the Fourth Armored Division were to become accustomed to the change.) The Fifth Armored Regiment became the 35th Armored Regiment (Light); the Seventh Armored Regiment became the 37th Armored Regiment (Light); the Eighth Armored Regiment became the 80th Armored Regiment (Medium); the Fourth Reconnaissance Battalion became the 84th Reconnaissance Battalion, and the 49th Signal Company became the 144th Signal Company.

Under the direction of Warrant Officer Henry Bellman (now retired) the band of the Seventh Field Artillery, Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont, came to Pine Camp on May 15. The band was assigned to the 66th Field Artillery Regiment (Armored).

During the month of May, the Fourth Armored Division had its share of distinguished visitors. Thomas E. Dewey of New York City, chairman of the United Service Organizations, visited Pine Camp and made an inspection tour of the Fourth Armored Division. While here he discussed the provisions for recreational facilities for the men of the division with leaders of the surrounding communities.

Major General Adna R. Chaffee, Chief of the Armored Force, paid an official visit to the Fourth Armored Division on May 27. It was General Chaffee's first visit to Pine Camp since the reservation became an armored division post. His stay lasted two days in which time he inspected the camp and surveyed the progress made by the Fourth Armored Division since its activation.

The last week in May brought the last group of selectees to Pine Camp, and the first week of the 13-weeks period of basic training. The new men were assigned to permanent units and were introduced to a rigorous program of calisthenics, close order drill, instruction in military courtesy, map reading, vehicle driving instruction and other subjects vital to the armored force.

The men began familiarization firing on the new 1,000-inch Snow Range and the pistol range on June 4. One week later the first regimental retreat and review was held by 2,000 soldiers of the 51st Infantry Regiment (Armored).

An intensive athletic program was inaugurated in June. Regimental leagues were formed for baseball, volley ball and track, and a swimming hole was opened at Buck Creek Park. On June 18 approximately 600 men of the 22nd Field Artillery Battalion (Armored) and the 66th Field Artillery Regiment (Armored) took part in a track meet.

The following day the 66th presented guidons to its units.

An inspection tour of the Post was made on June 20 by Major General Irving M. Phillipson, Second Corps Area commander.

The following day a bugler's school was opened, with a student body consisting of 30 enlisted men from all organizations of the division. Sergeant Alexander Stone of the 66th Field Artillery Band, served as instructor. The Division Chemical School was opened a few days later with 20 officers and 50 non-commissioned officers enrolled in a one-week course in chemical warfare. This course was repeated until all officers and non-commissioned officers had received training. An umpire course began June 24 for 98 officers of the division, and on the following day 342 enlisted men enrolled as students in the Division Radio Operators' School.

Pine Camp was officially designated a permanent post on June 24.

With the close of the first four weeks of basic training on June 23, the individual and crew training phase of instruction began. Selectees were taught bivouac technique, the pitching of shelter-halves, scouting formations, methods of camouflage and defense against chemical warfare. Division training tests in mass calisthenics and close order drill were held to determine the progress the selectees had made in their first four weeks.

Ferrying maneuvers highlighted the fifth week of training, when enlisted men of the 24th Engineer Battalion transported men of the 51st Infantry Regiment across Black River in assault boats. This exercise was the first of a series of water-crossing problems.

Gradually the enlisted men of the Fourth Armored Division were given more highly specialized training. On June 30, 28 non-commissioned officers left to attend the Officers Candidate School; 149 selectees were sent the following day to attend courses in radio electricity, auto mechanics, tank mechanics and gunnery at the Armored Force School, Fort Knox, Kentucky.

The War Department's Service Club for enlisted men opened on July 3.

July 4 called for a double celebration on the part of three of the division's Lieutenant Colonels who received their promotions on that day: Thomas J. Camp, commander of the 51st Infantry Regiment (Armored); J. B. Thompson, commander of the Division Trains, and Vernon E. Prichard, Chief of Staff.

The Fourth Armored Division held its first Division Review on July 9. General Baird and his reviewing officers witnessed a parade of the entire division, including 307 selectees who arrived at Pine Camp from the Fort Riley Replacement Training Center the day before.

Organization Day of the Armored Forces was celebrated July 10 with a holiday for all men of the division. A track meet was held in the morning, and General Baird presented a trophy to the victorious team of the 66th Field Artillery.

As the seventh week of basic training neared its close, men of the 24th Engineer Battalion (Armored) completed the construction of a 500-yard obstacle course. The course was used by all organizations of the division to harden the men.

Brigadier General Henry Welles Baird became a Major General, effective July 11, at a brief ceremony at Division Headquarters on July 17. The oath of office was administered by Major Wallace H. Barnes, Adjutant General of the Fourth Armored Division, and the stars denoting the new grade were pinned to General Baird's shoulders by Colonel William M. Grimes, commander of the 37th Armored Regiment (now a Major General and commander of the Eighth Armored Division), and Colonel Vernon E. Prichard, Chief of Staff (now Brigadier General and commander of Combat Command B, Fourth Armored Division).

Two changes in regimental commands took place on July 24. Colonel William M. Grimes was relieved as commanding officer of the 37th Armored Regiment and was assigned to command the Fourth Armored Brigade. Colonel John B. Thompson was relieved from the Divisional Staff as train commander and assigned to command the 37th Armored Regiment, and Lieutenant Colonel L. L. Martin, executive officer of the 35th Armored Regiment, was made Train Commander.

With the 13-week period of basic training nearing its close, emphasis was shifted to application of the basic principles taught. Road marches and overnight bivouacs became regular events, and almost every unit found itself taking part in problems and small-scale maneuvers as part of the everyday program.

The 66th Field Artillery Band led several units of the division in the Labor Day parade in Watertown. On September 2, a detachment of one officer and 19 men left Pine Camp for Governor's Island, New York, to take part in a three-day recruiting exhibition. Because personnel had remained on duty over Labor Day, the following week-end was declared a holiday.

The Fourth Armored Division contributed 905 enlisted men to the cadre which formed the Fifth Armored Division. These men left Pine Camp for Fort Knox in two special trains on September 7. Three days later, 770 selectees from the Armored Force Replacement Training Center arrived to fill the places of the cadremen.

Lou Ambers, former world's lightweight boxing champion, came to Pine Camp in September to referee the final matches for the division boxing championships. The team prize was won by the 66th Field Artillery Regiment (Armored) which was prominent in all summer athletic activities. On September 18, the 66th added the volley ball tournament to its long list of triumphs.

General Baird attended services when the first of five chapels, then under construction at Pine Camp, was completed on September 21.

Throughout September emphasis was placed on training in practical combat problems and field trips. Ambitious road marches were made and more varied problems attempted. On September 12, 450 soldiers of the 22nd Field Artillery Battalion (Armored) went by motor convoy to Clayton, New York, where they bivouaced all night; on September 26 a convoy of 104 vehicles, 13 officers and 276 men left for Lake Placid for a bivouac and an exhibition of equipment in connection with Defense Day exercises. On September 23, members of the 35th Armored Regiment floated a "peep" across Black River at the ponton school.

Despite large fluctuations in the size of the division, its strength by the end of September was only slightly under that authorized.

October, however, hit the personnel of the division hard, for the release of over-age selectees began in accordance with a Congressional Act, and more than 1,500 men were slated to leave the division.

The highlight of the October program was the first full division road march. Only sufficient men to guard the Post were left behind. The division marched in three columns with an approximate total of 9,000 officers and men and 1,600 vehicles. The march, with full field equipment, lasted three days.

Late in the month the division received its first shipment of 28-ton medium tanks, which were thrown into immediate training service, a new phase in the division's life.

The division held its second Divisional Review on November 3, at which time Major General Henry W. Baird attached World War streamers to the flags of the 51st Infantry Regiment (Armored). While the honored streamers were being presented, planes from the 91st Observation Squadron, one of the oldest aviation units of the United States Army and also a veteran of the first World War, which was attached to the division for a short time, zoomed low over the ceremony.

Supplementing its varied Armistice Day activities, the Fourth Armored Division sent a detachment to the National Horse Show in New York's Madison Square Garden. A second group from the division staged a large show at Malone, New York, and units took part in celebrations at Watertown, Utica and Syracuse.

On December 8, 960 officers and men of the 35th Armored Regiment, with full field equipment, visited Rome, New York, and paraded before civic officials. All the city's facilities were devoted to entertaining the visitors during their overnight stay.

The outbreak of war in December brought many changes to the Fourth Armored Division. Overnight, activity increased. The roar of bombs had hardly died in Manila and Pearl Harbor before over-age selectees, recently released from service, began pouring back into camp.

Sergeant Charles S. Sheehan, a seasoned artilleryman, spoke for the entire personnel when he said, "The quicker we kick hell out of them the sooner we shall have peace again."

Training tempo accelerated. The Fourth Armored Division, already famed for its severe training schedule, redoubled its effort. Men at last knew why they had been called into service, and everyone went about his tasks with a new vigor.

Before the middle of the month, the new Artillery Range, made possible by camp expansion, was opened. Batteries of the 66th Field Artillery Regiment (Armored) and the 22nd Field Artillery Battalion (Armored) opened the range with a day-long firing practice, followed by a demonstration of artillery in support of armored division operations.

Meanwhile, as cold weather set in, tank activity became great. Test runs and firing efficiency tests were made under winter wartime conditions.

Shortly after the declaration of war, the Army revised its tables of organization so that the complement of light tanks was cut and that of medium tanks increased. This step was taken after close observation of the desert fighting between British and German armies.

With this reorganization came redesignation of all the units of the Fourth Armored Division. The 80th Armored Regiment, in activation since April 15, 1941, was inactivated and the personnel merged with other units. The 18th Quartermaster Battalion became the Fourth Armored Supply Battalion; the 20th Ordnance Battalion became the Fourth Armored Maintenance Battalion. At this time the 66th Field Artillery Regiment (Armored) was redesignated a battalion and was split to form the 94th Armored Field Artillery Battalion. The artillery of the division thus was made to consist of three separate battalions instead of a regiment and one separate battalion. Reorganization was completed with the inactivation of the Fourth Armored Brigade and the formation of two Combat Commands. All units in the division added the "Armored" to their unit name, and the two armored regiments dropped the designation "Light" from their names.

Immediately after this, Major General Henry W. Baird announced formation of the 704th Tank Destroyer Battalion, a unit attached but not a part of the division. The unit was formed with the complete Battery "D" of the 22nd Field Artillery Battalion as a nucleus. Major Douglas Cameron commanded the new unit. On March 16, the 98th Ordnance Company was activated and attached to the Fourth Armored Maintenance Battalion, with First Lieutenant Duane C. Erickson in command.

During February, a provisional test company of the Fourth Armored Division took to the field in sub-zero weather to discover the reaction of men and equipment to bitter cold. Almost every unit of the division was represented in the 121 men sent on the assignment under the command of Captain Charles W. Walson of the 35th Armored Regiment. During the experiment, the company remained six days in the field and traveled over 200 miles. Much valuable information was reported by Captain Walson.

The division was visited on March 9 by Major General Jacob L. Devers, chief of the Armored Force. General Devers highly complimented the work of the division, and particularly emphasized the value of winter training. He pointed out that the Fourth Armored Division was the first to operate under winter conditions and that the program was highly successful.

The training lessons learned by the Fourth Armored Division, meanwhile, were being transmitted throughout the fast-growing Armored Force as officers and men were sent from Pine Camp to other units, especially new divisions.

Colonel John B. Thompson, commander of the 37th Armored Regiment, was put in charge of a Combat Command of the Seventh Armored Division and was made a Brigadier General. Colonel Thomas J. Camp, commander of the 51st Armored Infantry Regiment, was transferred from the division to a post at Armored Force Headquarters and later was promoted to Brigadier General. Soon afterwards Brigadier General William M. Grimes, a combat commander in the division, was transferred to command the Eighth Armored Division. Colonel Roderick R. Allen, Chief of Staff of the Sixth Armored Division, replaced General Grimes and was made a Brigadier General. Colonel Vernon E. Prichard, a combat commander in the division, and Colonel John E. Lewis, former Division Artillery Officer who had been transferred from the division late in 1941, were both made Brigadier Generals at this time. Lieutenant Colonel Bruce C. Clarke, commanding officer of the 24th Armored Engineer Battalion was designated as Chief of Staff and promoted to Colonel.

Units from the division had wide participation April 6 in Army Day observances in several cities. Men and equipment took part in parades and exhibitions in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Rochester, New York; Buffalo, New York; in nearby Watertown, and at Pine Camp itself, where the public was invited to an "open house" exhibition of training and equipment.

Only a brief reveille ceremony interrupted war-time training of the division as it marked the first anniversary of its activation on April 15. A message from General Baird told troops that the unit was ready to do the job ahead "with willingness, vigor and determination." The General cited the intensive training program planned for the summer and the need for all to be "aggressive and an expert at his individual job."

A column of 30 vehicles manned by 130 officers and men visited Syracuse on April 18 and took part in a parade to stimulate the sale of war bonds and stamps.

Another distinguished visitor was added to the division's list when Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York State came to Pine Camp on April 29. The Governor spent a busy day at the post, for he inspected every section of the camp, witnessed a combat exercise, viewed a river crossing by troops and watched artillery in action, in addition to taking a ride in a tank and firing the M-1 rifle and sub-machine gun. Governor Lehman's son, Lieutenant John R. Lehman, a member of the 35th Armored Regiment, acted as the Governor's aide during his visit.

The first Division Review since the outbreak of war was held May 23 before General Baird, his staff, 82 cadets from the United States Military Academy who were completing a week's training tour of the camp, and 3,000 civilian guests.

On May 26, Colonel Leo A. Besette took command of the 51st Armored Infantry Regiment after Colonel Charles S. Johnson had been transferred to the Armored Force School at Fort Knox. Lieutenant Colonel Hayden A. Sears, formerly A. C. of S., G-3, took command of the 35th Armored Regiment.

The announcement on June 6 that Major General Henry W. Baird, commander of the division since its activation, was to leave for a post at Armored Force Headquarters hit home with every member of the division, all of whom had grown to respect and honor him as their leader. Brigadier General John S. Wood, head of a Combat Command in the Fifth Armored Division, was designated by the War Department as his successor. General Wood was promoted to the rank of Major General June 26, 1942.

General Baird found the division on April 15, 1941, a sprinkling of experienced men among a large number of raw recruits. He left the division a fast, well-knit combat unit, ready and anxious to take part in the war their country is waging. Hard work was his program, and his leadership never flagged in getting the most out of the men and equipment that made up the Fourth Armored Division.

DIVISION HEADQUARTERS COMPANY

HISTORY OF THE DIVISION HEADQUARTERS COMPANY

FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION

When the Fourth Armored Division was activated on April 15, 1941, Division Headquarters Company was composed of four officers and 54 enlisted men who had come with the cadre from Fort Knox, Kentucky. The strength remained at this figure for about a month, when the arrival of selectees began to fill out its roster. By the twenty-seventh the complement was fully manned.

The first Commanding Officer of the Company was Captain Edward J. Rodden, who was relieved on July 21 by Captain Thomas D. Gillis. First Lieutenant Louis H. Hough assumed command on January 15, 1942, and remained until April 12 when he was transferred to the Eighth Armored Division. Command of the Company was then assumed by First Lieutenant George B. Tobey, who was promoted to the rank of Captain on June 20, 1942.

The program during the first few weeks of the basic training for the Company consisted of daily drill and calisthenics, lectures in the care and use of weapons, instruction in protection from gas attacks, map reading, vehicle maintenance, and proper driving methods. Late in June more specialized training was begun and numerous men were selected to attend Army schools. Firing practice began late in July.

In July and August many men from the Company were transferred to Division Headquarters to work as clerks, messengers, or specialists. When the Division Military Police Section was organized in July, all of its officers and men were furnished by Division Headquarters Company.

Five scout cars and one staff car comprised the motorized equipment of the Company at the time of its organization, but by the end of September the full vehicular strength was reached. On September 13 the Company's motor pool was moving into new, modern quarters.

In addition to several one-day road marches and participation in Command Post Exercises, the Company had made two major overnight trips by October 1. On August 21, four officers and 100 enlisted men went by motor convoy to Lake Placid, New York, for an overnight bivouac exercise. A similar march was made the following week in company with detachments of the 22nd Armored Field Artillery and 24th Armored Engineer Battalions.

On January 6, 1942, 92 enlisted men from the inactivated 80th Armored Regiment were added to the Company's roster. Two days later 85 men were added from Headquarters of the inactivated Fourth Armored Brigade. At the same time, however, 161 enlisted men were transferred from Division Headquarters Company to Service Company, Fourth Armored Division.

Following a series of short road marches, the Company made a march of 270 miles to Tupper Lake and Old Forge, New York, March 11-13. A second long road march was made March 19-20, and a third on March 26-27.

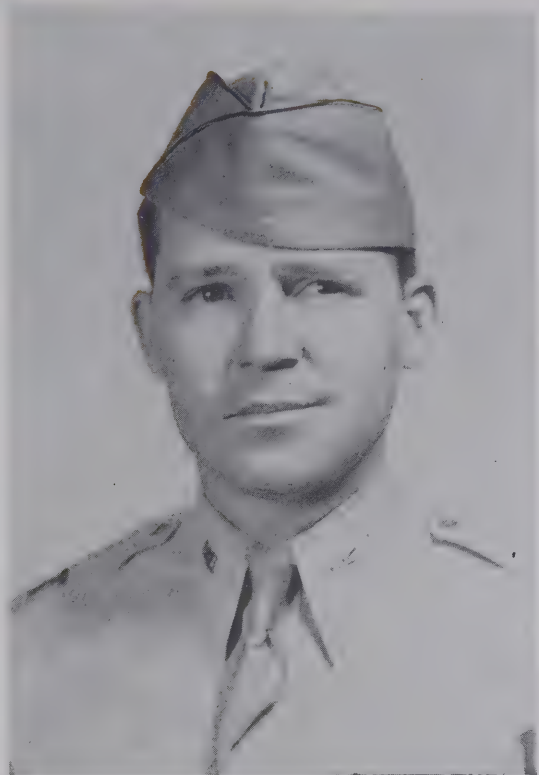

On April 10, 17 enlisted men left the Company on motor convoy for Fort Knox, Kentucky, where they were transferred to the Eighth Armored Division. These men were to form a part of the cadre for the Ninth Armored Division which was in the process of formation by the Eighth Armored Division. Sixty-one more of the Company's men were transferred to the Eighth Armored Division on April 16.

The Company participated in a four-day tactical exercise involving Headquarters units on May 19. On the 28th, Headquarters Company went on another overnight march and bivouac, this time under blackout conditions. Throughout June the Company spent its time in the active work of the Division and in strenuous training for its future duties.

JOSEPH McCHRISTIAN

Captain
Headquarters Commandant

Captain Joseph A. McChristian was born in Illinois October 12, 1914. He was a Private, serving with Company A of the Eighth Infantry and Company E of the 22nd Infantry from July 2, 1933, to July 26, 1935. Cadet United States Military Academy, 1935-1939. Commissioned Second Lieutenant, Infantry, June 12, 1939, serving with the 67th Infantry (medium tanks), Fort Benning, Georgia, being transferred to the Fourth Armored Division in 1941. Commissioned First Lieutenant September 9, 1940; accepted October 7, 1940. Commanding Officer, Service Company, Fourth Armored Division, and Aide to Major General Baird. Relieved as aide, made Headquarters Commandant.

DIVISION HEADQUARTERS COMPANY

Captain George B. Tobey, Jr., was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the ORC on June 10, 1940, through Massachusetts State College, Amherst, Massachusetts, after which he went to Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont, for two weeks. While there, he applied for extended active duty and in July was ordered to proceed to Seventh Cavalry Brigade at Fort Knox, Kentucky, to arrive there on July 15, 1940.

Upon his arrival there he discovered that the Seventh Cavalry was mechanized and just about five days before he arrived there it had been reorganized into the First Armored Division. Lieutenant Tobey was assigned to Company G, First Armored Regiment. After going through a short orientation course, in which he learned to drive all types of vehicles of the regiment, he was made platoon leader in G Company, and remained with that organization until he was ordered to Tank Maintenance Officers' School at the Armored Force School in February, 1941.

Before this, however, he was detailed to go on a march with a small unit to Washington, D. C. This unit was participating in President Roosevelt's inaugural parade on January 20, 1941. Upon graduation of the Tank Maintenance School, Second Lieutenant Tobey was transferred to the 35th Armored Regiment (Light) of the Fourth Armored Division, Pine Camp, New York. Lieutenant Tobey was assigned to Company D of that regiment where he performed the duties of Maintenance Officer and platoon leader for the next few months. He was then transferred to Company H of the Regiment and then at the end of October he was detailed as an umpire with the Second Armored Division at the fall maneuvers in South Carolina.

During the trip to South Carolina, Lieutenant Tobey was promoted temporarily to the rank of First Lieutenant. On his return from the maneuvers, he found himself on the Battalion Staff of the Third Battalion of the 35th Armored Regiment, where he performed the duties of S-2, S-3 Air for the Battalion.

During the month of February, he was placed on the cadre to go to one of the new armored divisions as a maintenance officer of the Headquarters Company of the Third Battalion in one of the new regiments. Instead, he was made Maintenance Officer of the Headquarters Company, Third Battalion of the 35th Armored Regiment.

On the first of April, 1942, he was transferred to Headquarters Company, Fourth Armored Division, taking command of the Company on the 14th of April, where he is at the present time in the grade of Captain (temporary). Captain Tobey was promoted to that grade on June 20, 1942.

HISTORY OF COMBAT COMMAND A

Combat Command A of the Fourth Armored Division was activated under the command of Brigadier General W. M. Grimes at Pine Camp, New York, on January 8, 1942. The officers and enlisted men were obtained from Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the Fourth Armored Brigade.

On the day of activation the following officers were assigned: Major David A. Watt, Jr., Executive Officer; Captain J. E. Brooks, Jr., Assistant S-3; Captain C. T. Adams, Assistant S-3; Captain A. I. Davenport, S-2; First Lieutenant A. J. Gricius, Aide de Camp to General Grimes. Later Brigadier General Grimes and his Aide were transferred to Fort Knox for duty with the then newly formed Eighth Armored Division. Colonel John W. Leonard assumed temporary command of the group until late in April, when Brigadier General Roderick R. Allen took command.

During the period from January 5 until April 15, 1942, inclusive, the Command developed and participated in seven Command Post Exercises dating from January 19 through March 31. Concurrent with these problems, which covered all phases of communication and combat team employment, there were three Division Command Post Exercises in which the Command actively participated. At the same time there were various schools for officers and personnel covering all the subjects pertaining to the Armored Force. The Headquarters instituted a Special Training Platoon School. Under the direction of the Combat Command A, this program got under way originally under the supervision of Captain N. B. Edwards and Captain C. T. Adams, who left before completion of the course.

Further development and the completion of this course were carried out under the supervision of Major C. J. Mansfield and Captain William E. Eckles, who were detailed from the 35th Armored Regiment for special duty. The group settled down to intensive training and instruction covering numerous phases of Armored Force equipment and method of employment. Grades and proficiency ratings of the students were recorded.

The following promotions and transfers were effected since January, 1942: Colonel R. R. Allen, present Commanding Officer, received his star, as did the former Commanding Officer, Colonel John W. Leonard, now designated as a combat commander with a newly formed armored Division. Major N. B. Edwards, upon his transfer to the 35th Armored Regiment, was succeeded as Executive Officer by Lieutenant Colonel C. J. Mansfield, now transferred to a newly formed armored division. Major W. J. Nichols succeeded Colonel Mansfield as Executive Officer of Combat Command A.

Lieutenant B. M. Olson, Assistant S-3, later appointed Aide de Camp to Brigadier General R. R. Allen, received his First Lieutenantcy in April, followed by the promotions of Captain J. R. Kelly, S-2 Officer, and First Lieutenant F. J. Miller, Communications Officer. Lieutenant L. B. Webster, after his transfer from the 35th Armored Regiment, was made First Lieutenant and succeeded Lieutenant Olson as Assistant S-3.

The turnover of men and officers of this Command has been extensive, demonstrating that the order of the day has been to move ahead. Since its conception on January 8, 1942, as Combat Command No. 1 and later as Combat Command A, it has been a lavish contributor to Officers Candidate School, Air Corps, and to the higher ranks of commissioned officers. A recapitulation of its record reveals, since January, 1942, seven candidates for embryo officers, three flying cadets and, to date, several advancements as non-commissioned officers among its enlisted personnel.

RODERICK R. ALLEN

Brigadier General
Commanding

Brigadier General Roderick R. Allen was born in Texas, January 29, 1894. General Staff Corps, August 3, 1936, to July 18, 1940, and June 15 to April 25, 1942. HISTORY OF COMBAT COMMAND B

Combat Command B of the Fourth Armored Division was activated on January 22, 1942, with Colonel (later Brigadier General) Vernon E. Prichard the Commanding Officer. The personnel was derived from the 35th Armored Regiment, the 37th Armored Regiment (M) the inactivated 80th Armored Regiment, and Headquarters Company, Fourth Armored Division. Until the formation of Combat Command B similar units had been called combat teams. In 1941 much planning and testing had revolved around these combat teams, and it was from this work that the combat commands were developed under the reorganization in January, 1942.

Because of the initial groundwork the Combat Command was able to take its place in the division scheme. On January 29, it participated in its first Command Post Exercise.

On February 5 Colonel Prichard was detailed to the Quartermaster Transport School at Holar-bird Quartermaster Depot, Maryland, and during his absence Colonel John B. Thompson, former Commanding Officer of the 37th Armored Regiment, took command. Colonel Prichard's promotion to the rank of Brigadier General came while he was at Holarbird. He returned to the Fourth Armored Division on February 24.

Throughout the spring and summer, Combat Command B was constantly called upon to take part in training exercises of various sorts, including two additional Command Post Exercises and exercises involving individual units or combinations of units. Co-ordination of the units of the Division, the Combat Command's main aim, was stressed in these exercises. During most of the month of June the Combat Command supervised various training tests throughout the Division, and has continued intensified work towards perfection of command.

HISTORY OF THE FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION SERVICE COMPANY

The Service Company, Fourth Armored Division, was activated at Pine Camp, New York, on January 5, 1942, under the command of Captain Roy O. Miller. The Company was designed primarily as the Rear Echelon, Division Headquarters. Assigned to it were all members of the Rear Echelon of Division Headquarters and part of the officers and enlisted men of the former Service Company, 80th Armored Regiment (M), which was inactivated on January 4, 1942.

Also assigned to the Service Company was the highly efficient Division Military Police Platoon. The duties of the Platoon include patrolling the reservation; providing special guard details; conveying the Division or units thereof on long marches; taking part in field problems and trips to various cities for demonstrations, parades, and other special performances; cooperating with civil police in all cases concerning military personnel; escorting visiting dignitaries on the Post; checking and reporting all accidents involving military vehicles; and providing a ready source of information for authorized visitors on the Post. Never idle, the Military Police are always ready for instant action. Many of their off-duty hours must be devoted to training of various sorts and field practice. Often they have been commended for their smart appearance and the manner in which they perform their duties, especially for their expert handling of traffic.

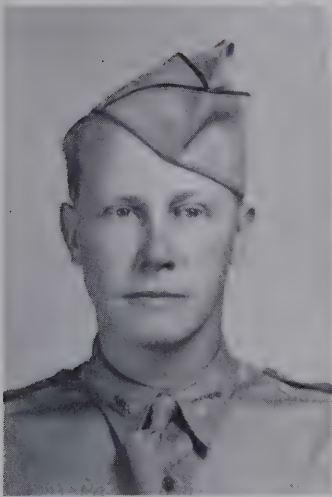

During the months of January, February, and March, 1942, a series of orientation lectures was held for the purpose of familiarizing each member of the Command with his place as a soldier in the war. All members of the Company attended the lectures and came away with a new sense of responsibility and determination. During the same period, extensive instruction was given by the Company officers in first echelon maintenance, map reading, sex hygiene, and operation of motor vehicles. This instruction was augmented by the use of motion pictures. The men of the Company also attended the Division Chemical Warfare School, and all of the personnel completed a Red Cross course in first aid.

On April 15, 1942, 37 men were selected to form a cadre for a new Armored Division. Eight men went to the Air Corps as flying cadets, and a large representation of the Company were sent to various Officers' Candidate Schools.

In the Service Company are some of the most skilled mechanics and drivers of the Division. These men have proved especially proficient in driving under blackout conditions. Each driver is learning to co-ordinate his driving to the demands of convoy, unity, and security. The Company supplies all clerks for Division Headquarters, and in this capacity the men perform all of the Division's paper work under the direction of Officers. While much of the clerks' time is spent at desks, their primary duty is to be soldiers. All have had their turns behind guns, and all are ready to drop pencils, push typewriters aside, and to pick up their weapons and take their places in the field.

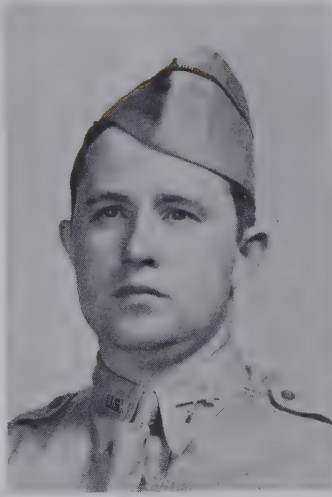

The Service Company stressed operations in the field during the spring and summer. Night training under blackout conditions was emphasized to such an extent that the unit has neared perfection in moving into bivouac in darkness. With months of intensive training behind it, the Service Company looks forward to the day of actual combat. Sure of itself and its fitness to compete, the outfit is ready to take its place on the battlefields of the world.

HISTORY OF THE 144TH ARMORED SIGNAL COMPANY

The 144th Armored Signal Company was formed as the 49th Signal Company (Armored) from a cadre of the 47th Signal Company (Armored), Fort Knox, Kentucky, and activated as a unit of the Fourth Armored Division, April 15, 1941, at Pine Camp, New York. First Lieutenant Chester J. Muckley commanded the five officers and 57 enlisted men who comprised the cadre. On August 7, 1941, the Company's designation was officially changed to the 144th Signal Armored Company; on January 5, 1942, it was given its present designation.

Between the time of activation and the arrival of the first selectees the Company smoothed out its organization and procured supplies. In this period First Lieutenant Harold R. Long and Second Lieutenants George F. Leatherman and J. Howard Wynn attended a refresher course at the Division Officers' Training Center. These same officers were ordered to the Armored Force School, Fort Knox, early in May. Between May 10 and May 24 the strength of the Company was increased by the arrival of recruits from Fort Niagara, New York; Fort Thomas, Kentucky; Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana; Fort Dix, New Jersey; Fort Hayes, Ohio; and Fort Meade, Maryland.

At the beginning of preliminary training, May 26, Major Carl H. Sturies assumed command of the Company. During the ensuing month selectees were instructed in close order drill, calisthenics, hygiene, military courtesy, and other basic subjects. Rifle firing, vehicle driving, code practice, and radio set installation were emphasized during mid-June. On June 11 the Fourth Armored Division Photo Section, under the supervision of First Lieutenant Chauncy C. Linard, 49th Signal Company (Armored), began operation. On June 24 a large number of enlisted men were enrolled in the Division Radio School.

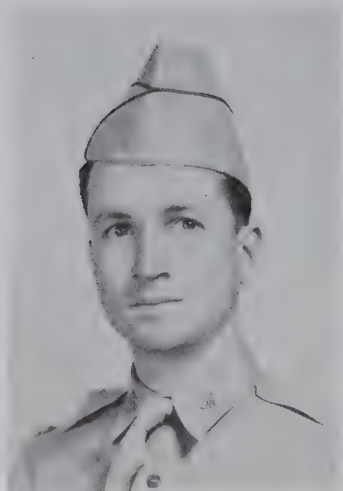

More varied training was given selectees in July. Driving and maintenance of motor vehicles, preparation of anti-tank obstacles, anti-mechanized defense, map reading, road marching, and blackout driving were stressed. Reduced distance command post exercises, overnight bivouacs, and practice in field radio operation followed.

After the basic training period had ended for the first group of men, specialized instruction was given in installation and operation of Division Command Post communication system, telephone pole line construction, and installation of radio equipment. During October, the training that was stressed included military courtesy, map reading, range finding, tank riding, first echelon motor maintenance, and road marching. Section training with overnight bivouacs and night-driving exercises were emphasized during the first two months of 1942.

Numerous changes in personnel and advances in rank were made during the latter part of 1941 and the early part of the new year. On September 7 two officers and 11 enlisted men left the company to form a cadre for the 145th Armored Signal Company, Fifth Armored Division. After December, seven men released to the Enlisted Reserve Corps began to return to the Company. On February 14, Major Sturies was made Division Signal Officer. The Company furnished a cadre of three officers, Major Sturies, Captain Muckley, and Lieutenant Chesley J. Sabin, and 41 men to the Eighth Armored Division at Fort Knox, Kentucky, on April 14. First Lieutenant John G. Johnson assumed command of the Company. In May, Lieutenant E. W. Ready was assigned to the Company, and First Sergeant S. T. Morgan was sent to Officers' Candidate School at Fort Monmouth. Numerous replacements reached the Company from Fort Knox during the month. Early in June, Lieutenant Johnson, Company Commander, was promoted to the rank of Captain; Lieutenant William H. Wisniski received a similar promotion later in the month. At the close of June the Company had an official roster of two Captains, three First Lieutenants, and four Second Lieutenants.

Throughout the spring the training became more strenuous with the purpose of toughening the men for efficient service. Long marches and bivouacs were not unusual. When new men arrived they were given the basic training and were soon ready to take up the more intricate subjects such as the installation and operation of radio paraphernalia and other specialized work. As a result of better organization and more rigorous training that had been developed during the life of the Company it has become an efficient force, ready for whatever may lie ahead.

FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION TRAINS COMPANY

FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION

UNITED STATES ARMY

1942

HISTORY OF THE FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION TRAINS

HEADQUARTERS AND HEADQUARTERS COMPANY

The Fourth Armored Division Trains was activated at Pine Camp, New York, April 15, 1941, as Train Headquarters, Fourth Armored Division, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel (now Brigadier General) John B. Thompson. Major Henry I. Keil was Executive Officer. The entire enlisted cadre for the new unit had been formerly part of the First Armored Division, Fort Knox, Kentucky. At the time of activation the Fourth Armored Division Trains included the 20th Ordnance Battalion, the 18th Quartermaster Battalion, and the 46th Medical Battalion.

Upon activation the Division Trains launched an intensive program of work and training. Under the guidance of Lieutenant Colonel Thompson, the Ordnance and Quartermaster Battalions gave a demonstration of the defense of trains on the march and in bivouac on June 9. One month later the Trains participated in the Armored Force Organization Day Review.

Lieutenant Colonel L. L. Martin relieved Lieutenant Colonel Thompson as Train Commander on July 22, 1941, when the latter was assigned to command the 37th Armored Regiment (L). The following October Lieutenant Colonel Martin was assigned to command the 35th Armored Regiment (L), and Trains command was assumed by Major Keil. The Trains were commanded by Major Keil until December 4 when he was transferred to the 51st Armored Infantry Regiment. On the same day Colonel Harold C. Fellows, formerly in command of the 84th Reconnaissance Battalion, Armored, assumed the Trains command.

Meanwhile the Division Trains participated in several Command Post Exercises, and a lecture on "The Function of Trains and Division Supply" was held for all Supply Officers and Service Unit Commanders. The Trains spent October 13-15 on a march with the Division.

The turn of the year brought many changes in the organization of Armored Forces, and they were reflected in the Division Trains. On January 1 the designation of the 20th Ordnance Battalion became the Fourth Armored Maintenance Battalion; and the 18th Quartermaster Battalion became the Fourth Armored Supply Battalion. Under the New Tables of Organization, Train Headquarters and Headquarters Company were to consist of 12 officers and 146 enlisted men, with two chaplains attached. The Trains also gained a Communications Platoon, a Reconnaissance Platoon, and a Tank Command. Following the reorganization Colonel Fellows remained in command. On January 8, 1942, Train Headquarters Company of the Division Trains was activated under the command of Captain Charles F. Latimer. The Company moved into new quarters on January 10.

Division Trains participated in a Command Post Exercise which was opened on January 22 and continued on February 19. Under the command of Colonel Fellows the Trains made a 260-mile march and bivouac to Lake Placid, New York, on March 11-13. During this operation the men tested winter equipment, and found time to enjoy winter sports.

Colonel Fellows was transferred to Headquarters V Corps Area, April 8, 1942, and Lieutenant Colonel Victor W. B. Wales assumed command until April 15, when Colonel W. A. Bigby, former Assistant Chief of Staff, G-4, took command of Division Trains. Lieutenant Colonel Wales then served as Executive Officer.

Much valuable experience was gained by the personnel of the Division Trains by several marches and bivouacs during the spring. On April 11 a march was conducted to Stony Point, New York, where all elements of Division Trains bivouacked. Upon return to Pine Camp the outfit bivouacked on the reservation before returning to quarters. Headquarters Company, Division Trains, made a tactical march to Stony Point, May 25. Bivouac was made in the field; the unit returned to Pine Camp on May 27. Division Trains made an administrative camp on Pine Camp reservation from June 8 to June 12. All work was carried on under field conditions during the period. From June 22 to June 26 Division Trains made a tactical bivouac on the Reservation. During this period unit Trains operated under the Division control and completed a 25-mile tactical road march.

Many changes were made in the officer personnel of the Division Trains between April 8 and July 1. Lieutenant Colonel C. J. Wilder was assigned as Executive Officer, and Lieutenant Colonels W. W. Boon and R. T. Rouse were assigned as Column Commanders. Lieutenant Colonel Rouse was relieved on April 14 and assigned as Professor of Military Science and Tactics at Michigan State University. Lieutenant Colonels Wilder and Boon were relieved on April 26 and 29, respectively, and ordered to the Command and General Staff School.

On May 25 Lieutenant Colonel Wales was relieved and assigned to Headquarters, Army Ground Forces. He was replaced as Executive Officer, Division Trains, by Lieutenant Colonel D. Cameron, who joined on June 6. Captain W. D. Barr was promoted to Major on June 1. On June 17 Majors P. B. Thomas and W. H. Brown were assigned as Column Commanders. Lieutenant Colonel Cameron and Majors Thomas and Brown were relieved and assigned as cadre officers for a new Armored Division on June 28. Majors Barr and A. E. McMillen, the latter former Executive Officer of the 704th Tank Destroyer Battalion, were assigned as Column Commanders. Captain John Walsh and First Lieutenant D. D. Dillon were assigned to Division Trains as Chaplains.

Division Trains stands ready for the test which will soon come. Members of the command have worked with their hearts as well as their hands. Their history will be written in the future and they expect to be proud of it.

24TH ARMORED ENGINEER BATTALION

FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION

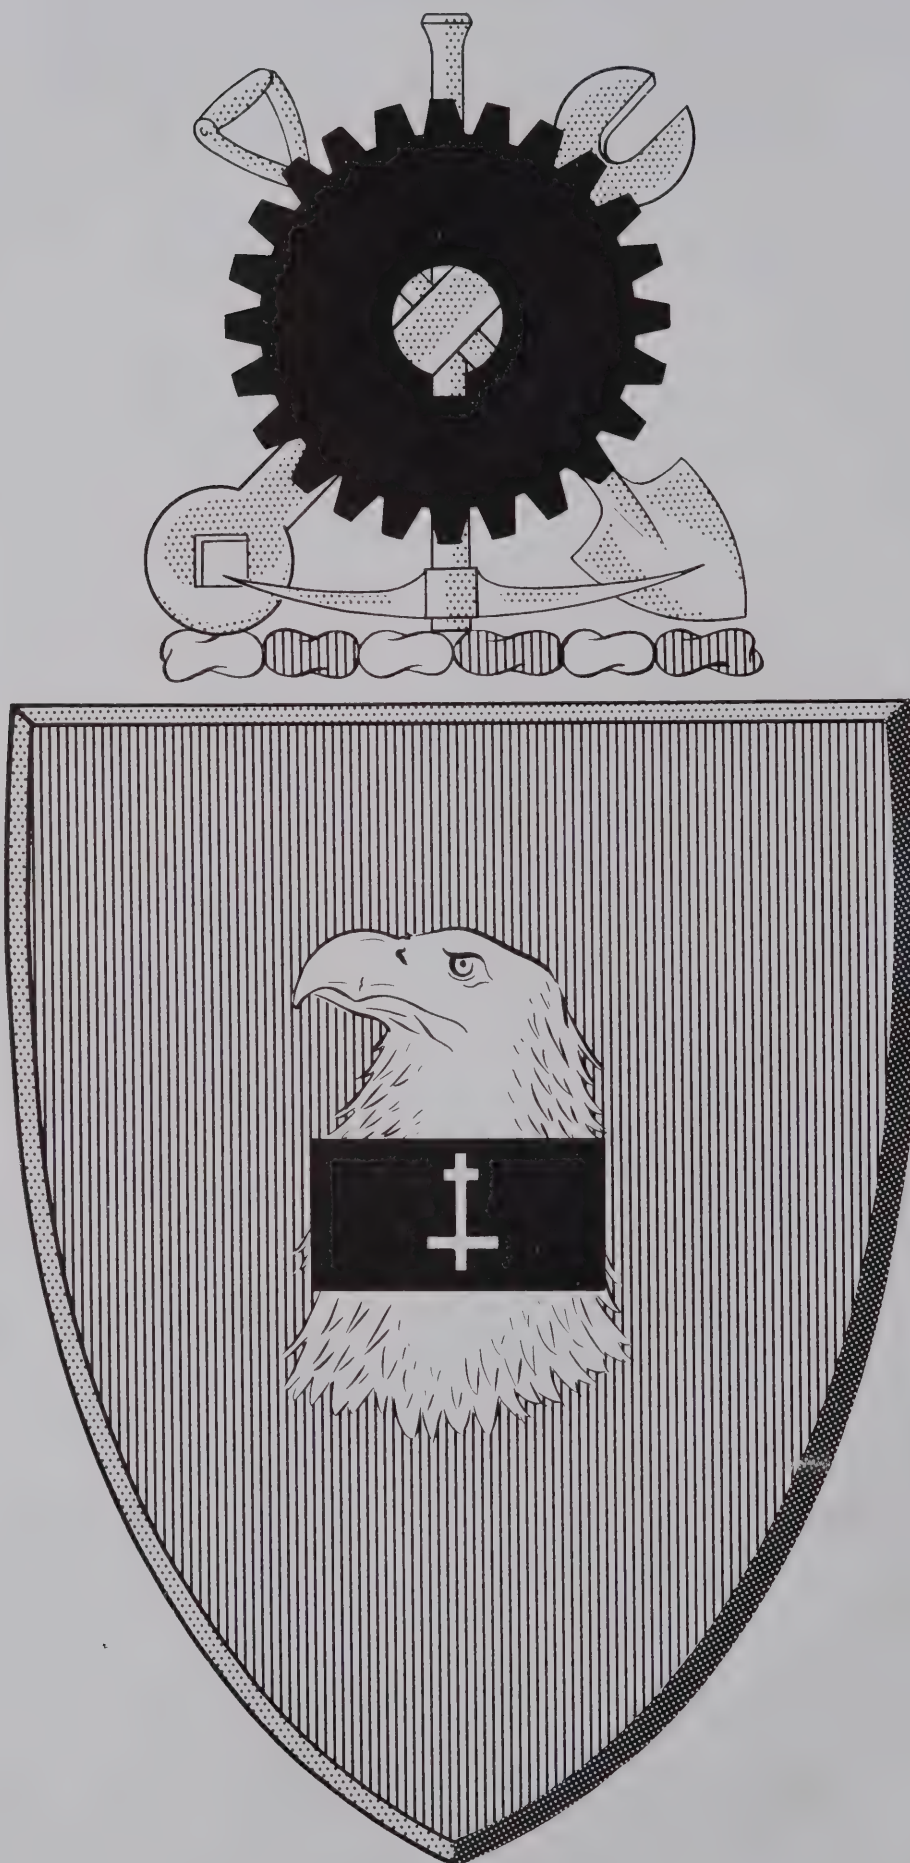

UNITED STATES ARMY

1942

Insignia

BLAZONRY

The shield is red with the charge in silver, the colors of the Engineer Corps. The eagle's head is taken from one of the supporters of the coat of arms of St. Mihiel. The crest indicates the regiment is mechanical as well as general service.

HISTORY OF THE 24TH ARMORED ENGINEER BATTALION

The 24th Armored Engineer Battalion traces its history back to World War I when it was created for overseas duty. The following is an excerpt from the Quartermaster General concerning the World War history of the Battalion:

"The 24th Engineers (Supply) was organized at Camp Dix, New Jersey, in November, 1917. Companies C, D, and E of the 24th Engineers were organized originally in September, 1917, as Companies F, D, and E, respectively, of the 26th Engineers. They were transferred to the 24th Engineers in November, 1917. Company F of the 24th Engineers was organized originally in September, 1917, as Company F of the 25th Engineers. It was transferred to the 24th Engineers in November, 1917.

"The 24th Engineers served in France from April 7, 1918, to May 16, 1919, and had the following combat service: St. Mihiel, September 12 to September 16, 1918; Meuse-Argonne, September 26 to October 12, 1918.

"The regiment was demobilized at Camp Jackson, South Carolina, in June, 1919.

"The 24th Engineer Regiment (General Service) was constituted as an inactive unit in 1927.

"Under the date of April 3, 1931, the following orders were issued: 'In order to preserve the history and traditions of the 24th Engineers (Supply and Shop), a World War unit, which was organized at Camp Dix, New Jersey, in November, 1917, and served in France from April 7, 1918, to May 16, 1919, it is hereby reconstituted and consolidated with the 24th Engineers (General Service).'"

The 24th Armored Engineer Battalion was activated as a component of the Fourth Armored Division on April 15, 1941, at Pine Camp, New York. Major Bruce C. Clarke was the Commanding Officer of this unit which was built from a cadre of 25 officers and 174 enlisted men furnished by the 16th Engineer Battalion at Fort Knox, Kentucky.

Before the arrival of selective service men, Battalion non-commissioned officers were schooled in their future duties as instructors while many of the officers attended a refresher course at the Division Officers' Training Center. Basic military training began on May 26, and was followed by fundamental engineering subjects including demolitions and mining, engineer reconnaissance, anti-tank mines, construction of obstacles, and defense of road blocks.

Training in stream crossing began in mid-July with assault boat drill and construction of ponton rafts from floating bridge equipment. Practice in construction of steel truss bridges began on August 1. Included in the preliminary period was the instruction of drivers of heavy equipment, such as bulldozers, air compressors, and tractor trailers.

Practical application of the training was afforded during the basic period with construction of a variety of projects. A 1,000-inch machine gun range with 200 targets and a 100-target pistol range together with a ponton school suitable for training in stream crossing was completed June 27. The 1,000-inch range was named for Lieutenant Colonel William A. Snow, Corps of Engineers, First Armored Corps, who died in September, 1940.

The 22 caliber indoor range consisting of 10 firing points with a 50-foot gallery constructed in the Battalion Area was completed by Company B on October 20, 1941. The armor-piercing range designated as Firing Point A was constructed with the assistance of some civilian labor by Company C and was completed on October 24. The sub-machine gun moving vehicle range designated as Firing Point B was completed by Company A three days later.

Three artillery observation posts were built by each company during this period.

The Battalion provided technical supervision to the Brigade Headquarters in the construction of the Moving Target Ranges I and J and Moving Vehicle Ranges E and H during October and November.

Major Bruce C. Clarke, who commanded the Battalion since its activation, was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel on January 8, 1942, and shortly thereafter was made Chief of Staff of the Division. He was promoted to Colonel on March 3. Captain H. A. Morris, Executive Officer, assumed command of the Battalion on January 20 and on February 22 was promoted to Major.

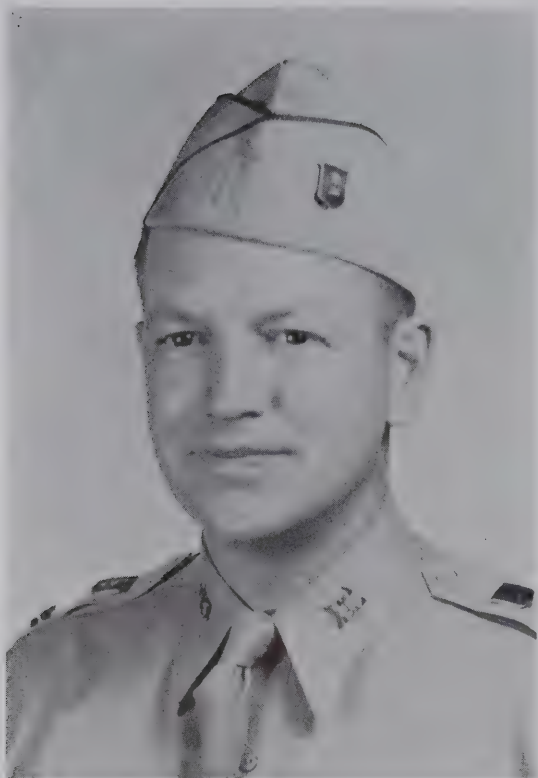

Organization Day, April 15, was celebrated with other Division units by a Reveille formation, but training was not otherwise interrupted.

On May 7, Company A started construction of G Range, a sunken track, moving target artillery range. Company D replaced Company A on this construction and G Range was completed on June 17.

G Range was redesignated as Lee Range by General Order No. 12, Headquarters, Pine Camp, in memory of Private First Class Vernon J. Lee, Company D, who was accidentally killed during its construction.

During the period June 1-4, Companies A, B, and C constructed three 50-foot artillery observation towers in the new range area.

On June 30, pneumatic ponton bridge construction began for the first time on St. James Lake.

84TH ARMORED RECONNAISSANCE BATTALION

FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION

UNITED STATES ARMY

HISTORY OF THE 84TH ARMORED RECONNAISSANCE BATTALION

The 84th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion had its origin as a separate organization as the Fourth Reconnaissance Battalion, which was formed with a framework of 35 officers and 169 enlisted men, 63 of whom had just finished basic training, from the First Reconnaissance Battalion of Fort Knox, Kentucky. The new Battalion was activated as a unit of the Fourth Armored Division on April 15, 1941. The Battalion was officially redesignated the 84th Reconnaissance Battalion (Armored) on May 12, 1941; on January 5, 1942, it was given its present designation.

The cadre was preceded by an advance detachment consisting of Lieutenant Colonel H. C. Fellows, Commanding Officer; Lieutenant Leslie D. Goodall, Sergeants E. M. Buck and T. R. Harris, and Corporal L. E. Huffman, which arrived at Pine Camp on April 8 to make preliminary housing and supply arrangements. Upon the arrival of the larger force on April 15 they were given intensive training in preparation for the selectees who were to come between May 13 and May 25, 1941.

During basic training, selectees were instructed in vehicle driving and maintenance, scouting methods, firing of weapons, and other fundamental subjects. Field exercises and road marches were conducted during June, and on the 28th of the month the entire Battalion took part in a dismounted march and bivouac operation.

A platoon of scout cars from the Battalion took part in a demonstration and parade at Lake Placid on July 4, 1941. Three other extended journeys were made by parts of the organization later in the year. During the week of September 15 a detachment of five officers and 150 enlisted men went to Fort Wayne, Michigan, on convoy; on September 25 a platoon participated in the Palmyra, New York, Fair. For six weeks starting August 20 a detachment of the 84th Reconnaissance Battalion officers were on detached duty at the Third Army Maneuvers in Louisiana.

In October, 1941, the training program of the Battalion emphasized small unit and motor vehicle maintenance instruction. This training was augmented by reconnaissance and communications field exercises. The Battalion made a road march and overnight bivouac on October 8-9; on October 13-15 the unit participated in the Division road march and bivouac in the Lewisburg-Gouverneur area. Colonel Fellows, Battalion Commander; Captains Leonard D. Witherill and Howard Gilsdorff; and Lieutenants Hugh H. Johnson, Gilbert D. Layton, and Warren M. Hargrave departed, October 29, for Chester, South Carolina, to participate in maneuvers.

All personnel present for duty in early November fired all weapons used by the Battalion on the 1,000-inch range. On the 10th and 11th a detachment of scout cars and tanks, commanded by Captain Tracy B. Harrington, marched to Gloversville and Schenectady, New York, to participate in Armistice Day parades. The Battalion had a share in its first mounted review as part of the Division on November 25.

Colonel Fellows was relieved of command of the Battalion on December 4, 1941, and assumed command of the Division Trains; Major John P. Willey was designated Commanding Officer of the Battalion. Between December 10 and December 20 all the personnel present fired all the weapons of the Battalion at known distances and at field targets. During the month each company participated in two stream crossings and five air-ground communications exercises.

With the beginning of the new year the Battalion launched a strenuous program of winter training. Selected officers and enlisted men attended an instructors' course in skiing and snowshoeing which began on January 8. These men were then detailed to instruct other officers and men in the Battalion. From March 15 to April 15 the tempo of training was again stepped up in preparation for Battalion training and tests and in anticipation of extended range work.

During the period of February 20-22 the Battalion was placed on Division Alert. Preparations were made beforehand and from the first minute that the Battalion was placed upon the Alert until its termination, officers and enlisted men of the 84th were ready to roll.

From March 2 to March 7 each company of the Battalion spent one night in the field. Again on March 11 the officers and men took to the field, this time as a Battalion and for three consecutive days. On April 4 eight officers and 229 enlisted men plus a large number of vehicles participated in the Army Day Parade at Schenectady, New York, where they upheld most admirably the high traditions of the Division. On April 5 Company B put on a display at the Stationary Army Day exhibit at Pine Camp.

Besides the regular training, the Battalion's life was a busy one during the early part of 1942. On February 22 it moved from its location in Area 10 to its present home in Area 7. Within a week it was ready for inspection and passed that hurdle with approval. On February 25, by verbal orders from the Division, all officers were ordered to spend four nights on the post primarily for the purpose of attending schools. Company A served as an escort for Major General Devers during his visit to the Division on March 6 and it was commended for its fine showing.

By mid-April the Battalion had begun to concentrate on Battalion tests, emphasizing particularly the functioning and employment of the 50 caliber machine gun. On April 23 the Battalion Staff Officers participated in a Command Post Exercise held by the Division and as on previous CPX problems much was gained from the experience.

An intensified program of combat firing was initiated in early May. Throughout the months of May and June hardly a day passed without at least one company being on the range. At the same time other training was progressing very satisfactorily. Instruction in the function of the new assault guns had reached a highly advanced and technical stage; on June 8 Battalion Training Tests were begun in this subject for each of the Reconnaissance Companies. Air-ground liaison and Intelligence training were two other subjects which were stressed during this period. Practical problems in air-ground communication were held frequently in conjunction with the 91st Observation Squadron.

Training in the field was given the Battalion along with the rest of the Division during the period of June 22-26. All movements and bivouac procedure were tactical, which gave the Battalion an opportunity to test the efficiency of the personnel under field conditions. Training in blackout driving, reconnaissance, security, and camouflage were subjects most stressed. The practical instruction was immensely valuable to everyone in the Battalion.

From an administrative point of view the following incidents were worth particular notice during the period of April 15-June 30, 1942. On April 19, Company A participated in a parade at Syracuse, New York, held for the purpose of stimulating the sale of Defense Bonds. Company B provided the escort of honor on April 29 for Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York. On May 29, Company A journeyed to Buffalo, New York, to have a share in the Decoration Day parade of May 31, 1942. On May 23, and again on June 8, the Battalion joined in Division Reviews. On the latter occasion the Review was in honor of Major General Baird, who was soon to relinquish command of the Division. Company C of the 84th on June 17 escorted Major General John S. Wood, the new Division Commander, to the Post; two days later two vehicles from the Battalion aided in escorting Major General Baird, the retiring Division Commander, off the post.

Training of the Battalion as an integral part of an Armored Division continues as its members strive for the perfection necessary to fully do its part when the occasion arises.

84TH ARMORED RECONNAISSANCE BATTALION

PINE CAMP, NEW YORK

GREETINGS

Members of the 84th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion, Pine Camp, New York:

Due to the rapid turnover in officer and enlisted personnel in this Battalion, I desire to call to the attention of every individual some of the accomplishments of this Battalion since January, 1942.

This organization has been called on for many duties, during this period, January, 1942, to the present date with many interruptions which have affected training to a great degree, however, it must be remembered that many changes will occur and the continuity of events will certainly be disrupted by the battlefield, events therefore it is well to become adaptable to change of plans now.

January marked the return of officers who had been serving as umpires during the Carolina Maneuvers. January 5, 1942, saw the redesignation of the old 84th Reconnaissance Battalion (Armored) to the 84th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion. In accordance with the new Table of Organization for the Armored Force, under which this was accomplished, the old Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment of the 84th Reconnaissance Battalion (Armored) was inactivated and Headquarters and Headquarters Company of the 84th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion was activated as of January 6, 1942. At the same time Company C was redesignated Company D, and Company D was redesignated Company C, thereby making Company C a reconnaissance company and Company D a tank Company.

During January, February, and March, the 84th Reconnaissance Battalion emphasized winter training; instruction in skiing, snowshoeing, and ice skating were carried on extensively.

The Battalion was placed on alert by the Division during the latter part of February and has been continuously alerted from time to time from that date on; which has meant that the Battalion has been ready to roll for almost a period of six months.

Firing of weapons has been emphasized within the Battalion and special effort has been made to fire some each month rather than use all available ammunition during one specific short period.

The Battalion moved from area ten (10) to its present location, in February, which was accomplished with much work in very limited time, but gave the organization an opportunity to be shaken down, thereby relieving their supply rooms of unnecessary equipment which had accumulated over a period of time.

Throughout this period there have been escorts, ceremonies on the post; and parades in most of the larger cities over the State of New York, in which the Battalion has been represented.

The Battalion sent 16 officers and 218 enlisted men to Fort Knox, Kentucky, as cadre for a new Division during February.

In April the 84th Armored Reconnaissance Battalion won the Post Basketball Championship, the members of the Command demonstrating not only that they can work hard but that they also can play hard.

April 15 was the first anniversary of the Fourth Armored Division which was celebrated in a very quiet manner.

There have been enlisted specialists sent throughout the Armored Force to fill in where key men were required to lead, direct, train, serve and maintain its echelons of weapons, vehicles and communications. This headquarters has received very favorable reports on the men who have left this Battalion.

The soldier of today and especially in the Reconnaissance Battalion is a trained specialist and a product of modern military education.

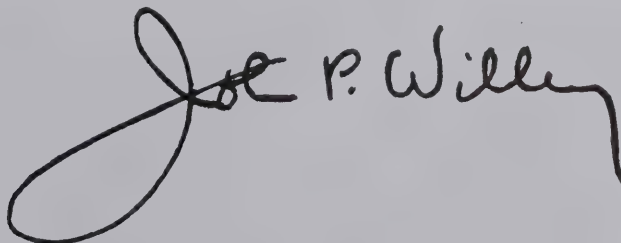

The success of any unit of our army rests wholly with the men who make up that unit. The rapid expansion of our army has caused us to depend upon the average citizen in this country and the average citizen is a good citizen, therefore that explains some of the successes by which we have accomplished the results that we have.

This is a hard working unit; there have been times that the organizations have worked day and night in order to meet inspections, that were to represent the standards of this Battalion and the results have always been excellent.

Take, for example, the inspection by Division of all messes, mess equipment, garrison and field; here the men worked in some instances until 2 a. m., going so far as to wash the outside walls of mess halls. This will bear me out that it is not the number of hours the men consider necessary to complete a job, but that the job or the mission must be accomplished in order to be worthy of being a member of this Battalion. The men are proud of their organizations, which is definitely shown by the enthusiasm during competitive work between companies.

I want you to know that your efforts are not overlooked.

I want to extend my sincere appreciation of the fine exhibition of physical stamina, aggressiveness and esprit de corps. I am proud of the performance of officers and men, and congratulate you for duty well done.

704TH TANK DESTROYER BATTALION

FOURTH ARMORED DIVISION

UNITED STATES ARMY

Greetings to the Officers and Men of the 704th Tank Destroyer Battalion.

You are privileged to be members of the United States Army's newest fighting force, the Tank Destroyer Command. You are further privileged in being permanently attached to our powerful Armored Force.

Some of you may feel that because our organization is so new and because we, as yet, have no battle standards, that we are lacking in traditions which the older branches of the service boast. This, however, is not the case. The members of this organization came from three of the oldest branches of our Army, bringing with them the traditions and characteristics of all three. You must have as much confidence in, and knowledge of, your weapons as Artillery; You must emulate the precision of maneuver and the thoroughness of planning of Infantry; and in your attack, you must develop the boldness and courage of Cavalry.

These characteristics will carry you to success on any battlefield- and I know that you possess them all.

HISTORY OF THE 704TH TANK DESTROYER BATTALION

The 704th Tank Destroyer Battalion was activated at Pine Camp and attached to the Fourth Armored Division on December 15, 1941. Its cadre consisted of seven officers and 101 enlisted men of Battery D, 22nd Field Artillery Battalion (Armored). The Battalion's first commander was Major Douglas Cameron, promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in February, assigned from Headquarters, Fourth Armored Division.

Individual training was initiated immediately with the view of preparing the men for efficient individual and team duty. Crew and squad training was begun in February, 1942, with improvised self-propelled weapons consisting of 75-mm. guns mounted on two-and-one-half-ton trucks. A reconnaissance company was formed in February. Selected men from all companies formed a special training and demonstration tank destroyer platoon for an intensive course of training under the Commanding General of Combat Command A.

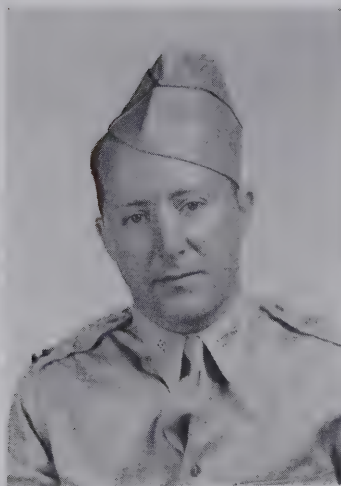

In March night training and bivouac procedure became part of the schedule as the men became proficient in their individual and crew assignments. This training schedule was revised, however, when 246 men were assigned to the Battalion from the Fourth Armored Division Training Center. Use was made of the Special Training Platoon and the "County Fair" system of instruction in order to train these men as quickly as possible in the tactics of the tank destroyer battalion. The Battalion was further augmented on April 11 by the arrival from Fort Knox, Kentucky, of 80 enlisted men who had completed their basic training at the Armored Force Replacement Center.

The Battalion assisted in the celebration of the Fourth Armored Division's anniversary April 15 by firing a reveille salute of six 75-mm. guns. The salute was the first time a shot had been fired from a major weapon of the Battalion. A noon salute was also given by the Battalion at the Division's Independence Day celebration and review.

When Lieutenant Colonel Cameron left the Battalion on April 30 he was succeeded by Lieutenant Colonel Hayden Sears who served as Commanding Officer for 10 days. Lieutenant Colonel Louis J. Storck succeeded Lieutenant Colonel Sears, May 13, and he was in turn followed by Major Delk M. Oden as Commanding Officer on June 22.

The spring and summer brought intensified training on a company and battalion scale. Before the month of June had passed the Battalion was carrying its full share of the field exercises and it began to have the appearance of a seasoned outfit. Realizing the limited time for preparation for maneuvers and the other serious business that was ahead, the officers and men applied themselves to their tasks with a determination to be prepared for whatever mission they might be called upon to fulfill.
